The COVID-19 pandemic was a public health and economic crisis that hit nationwide, but perhaps no place suffered the economic effects of the pandemic more than Las Vegas, and Nevada as a whole.

This second CEPS annual addresses the crucial problem of persistent high unemployment in Europe, despite recent years of economic recovery. Recurring themes in the discussion of possible solutions are the relative importance of aggregate demand, labor-market flexibility, capital formation, and the organization of work-time in order to achieve work-sharing. The report of the CEPS Macroeconomic Policy Group included in this volume identifies a mix of macroeconomic strategies that could gradually boost output while containing inflation, bringing it back to the five percent level of the late 1970s. Contributors are Franco Modigliani (MIT), Marie Monti (Bocconi University), Jacques Dr é ze, Herbert Giersch (Kiel), and Richard Layard. Wolfgang Franz (University of Stuttgart) provides strong evidence that contractionary policies aimed at combating inflation will mean higher unemployment in the long run. David Metcalf (London School of Economics) surveys the recent literature on labor-market rigidities in the European economies, focusing on problems of aggregate and relative wage flexibility and analyzing the relations to bargaining structure, the degree of cooperativism and labor-market legislation. The issue of work-sharing as a means of promoting employment is discussed by Jacques Dr é ze (Universit é Catholique de Louvain), who sees this as a method of achieving a more efficient allocation of regular jobs between "insiders" in the labor market and new entrants. He points out various ways - such as trading jobs between workers of different ages, sharing jobs, and trading hours for jobs - that work might realistically be shared. Richard Layard is Professor of Economics at the London School of Economics, Head of the Centre for Labour Economics, and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Employment Institute. Lars Calmfors is Associate Professor of Economics at the Institute for International Economic Studies, University of Stockholm. The Centre for European Policy Studies, based in Brussels, is an independent research institution which focuses on the major medium- and long-term issues facing the European community and Western Europe internally and internationally.

High and persistent unemployment rates in Europe during the eighties gave rise to a lively discussion about the nature and causes of joblessness. Among other sources structural unemployment was blamed for the lack of response of unemployment to increasing aggregate demand. Renewed attention was thus devoted to an analysis of the magnitude and the development of structural unemployment as well to its possible determinants. In this literature, the Beveridge curve experienced a resurrection and, at first glance, it seemed to be an appropriate tool to analyse the aforementioned issues. However, it was soon recognized that the Beveridge curve, i. e. the relation between unemployment and vacancies, was anything but stable, thus requiring a careful distinction between dynamic loops around a (stable?) long-run Beveridge curve and possible shifts due to, say, an increasing mismatch between labor supplied and demanded. The controversy is far from being settled at the time of this writing. This book contains a collection of hitherto unpublished papers which are devoted to a theoretical and econometric analysis of structural unemployment. The papers put considerable emphasis on the question to what extent the Beveridge curve can serve as an adequate tool for such studies. The countries under consideration are Germany and Austria. In what follows a very brief summary of each paper will be outlined. Franz and Siebeck present, at some length, a theoretical and econometric analysis of the Beveridge curve in Germany.

Reproduces 22 essays from their first publication between 1974 and 1997 on labor economics. Creedy (economics, U. of Melbourne) explores such themes as the effects of migration, population ageing, and retirement on the labor market; the economic analysis of internal labor markets; job mobility, earnings, and responsibility in skilled labor markets with a particular emphasis on chemists and professional scientists; and the relationship between trade unions, tax levels, and relative wages. He uses some low-level statistical arguments, but nothing too sophisticated. There is no subject index. Annotation copyrighted by Book News, Inc., Portland, OR
