The Lime Works: an Art Deco castle in Kent. In 1937, the local water company in Faversham built a water softening and purification plant consisting of two giant concrete funnels filled with lime. While the process works and is still sometimes used, the design of the building was flawed and it was eventually closed down and abandoned. The Lime Works was bought in 2005 and (mostly) converted into an Art Deco-influenced home.

For five years, Konrad has imprisoned himself and his crippled wife in an abandoned lime works where he's conducted odd auditory experiments and prepared to write his masterwork, The Sense of Hearing. As the story begins, he's just blown the head off his wife with the Mannlicher carbine she kept strapped to her wheelchair. The murder and the bizarre life that led to it are the subject of a mass of hearsay related by an unnamed life-insurance salesman in a narrative as mazy, byzantine, and mysterious as the lime works-Konrad's sanctuary and tomb.

Lime Works contains images which are moving for the ways in which they transcend the reality of their subject matter, a large lime stone processing plant and quarry. Renowned Japanese photographer Hatakeyama evokes the site as the landscape is torn asunder for industrial use. The result is a surprisingly eerie work, composed of rusting lots, polluted waters, and upturned stone.

But it would be unfair to the reader to reveal what happens when a gang of professional crooks gets wind of the scheme and moves to muscle in on this bettors' dream of a long-odds situation. Worked out with all the meticulous detail, terror, and suspense of a nightmare, the tale is, on one level, comparable to a Graham Greene thriller; on another, it explores a group of people, their relationships fears, and loves. For as Leslie A. Fiedler says in his introduction, "John Hawkes. . . makes terror rather than love the center of his work, knowing all the while, of course, that there can be no terror without the hope for love and love's defeat"
